Getting the most for the least—XTR

It's those darned laws of physics that dictate that if you want big sound, you need to move lots of air, and you just can't do that with small, thin speakers, right? Not so fast, Einstein!

While it's true that no TV manufacturers are building what you would call "good" speakers into their TV's, that is not to say that you can't achieve good—or even great sound without horribly large boxes in the room.

Definitive Technology's new XTR series illustrate the point. They have managed to bend the laws of physics to achieve amazing sound from speakers that are only one and a half inches deep! In fact, the cabinets are so slim that the magnets on the back of the woofers are actually part of the rear of the speaker cabinet. Very smart.

These super sleek boxes sound as good as they do without sticking out past even the slimmest LED television when mounted to the wall.

You can add a cool subwoofer too, (tucked discreetly out of sight) for an elegant look combined with solid home theatre punch. These are simply a great solution for bad TV sound.

Peace. Joy. Control.
A little more home control for the holidays

Quick Tastes

Our friends at Yamaha have released a new statement Home Theater receiver, called the RX-A3010. If you want to change out your aging Dolby Digital processor, the one you need is here now. For $1999.99 you are sooo done.

Martin Logan make those modern looking speakers you can see thru. Seems they are in every cool movie these days as well! The latest technology in electrostatics is embodied in the Electromotion ESL's, and at $2500 bucks, these things aren't out of reach for most audiophiles. They make matching center channel and surrounds too you know....

Headphone technology has accelerated with the advance of personal high fi. But home HI-FI headphones have now seen a new zenith. They are the all conquering Sennheiser HD 800. WOW. Just wow.

Check out the HD800 video on our web site, because we don't have the room here to do them justice...

Digital Projection LED - State of the Art

Never replace a projector bulb again. That's now a reality with the new DPI LED "M" series projector.

That said, the M-Vision Cine LED from Digital Projection is not an entry-level projector. Its $12,500.00 price is a decidedly high-end affair, aimed at the discriminating home theater enthusiast and/or videophile.

LED illumination also brings a new level of clarity and performance to the Projector world, and this state of the art DLP projector shows it off in spades.

Not only do you get performance approaching a 3 chip at 1/2 the price, meaning color and black levels unheard of previously, but you also get a DLP projector that's almost silent, as it no longer requires a color wheel! This is a no compromise projector, without the no compromise price.

It's great value for anyone with those lofty requirements. With incredibly long lamp life (60,000 hours) plus superior optics and light engine, it can be the last projector you ever buy, and it will always look fantastic. If you break it down, it makes a far greater value proposition than purchasing a budget mid-level projector.

No one ever regretted buying the good one, and this is it!
